

A Cube

If you increase the exponents of the sphere equation, something suprising happens. The sphere becomes a cube with rounded corners.

But this does not hold for all exponents. The equation for a cube is:

$$b = x^n + y^n + z^n$$

where the number n has to be even.

What happens if you choose odd numbers? How does the cube change if you further increase the even exponents?